This season This Old House will travel to both city and country, offering new ideas for young families, as well as those thinking about aging-in-place. First up is an 1887 Victorian-era two family house in Cambridge, Massachusetts that homeowners John and Sally hope to turn into a one-family home. Landscape contractor Roger Cook finds a few surprises in the yard, plumbing and heating expert Richard Trethewey uses an eye-opening energy audit to demonstrate the need for efficiency upgrades, and general contractor Tom Silva brings in a deconstruction expert to remove all of the old and unneeded house parts.
