HANNAH HART I Hart Food, Food Network

Hannah Hart is an entertainer and New York Times best-selling author.

Boasting over five million followers across her social platforms, Hannah is the creator and star of her award-winning, weekly web series My Drunk Kitchen, which has amassed millions of views since its first episode premiered in 2011. In 2012, Hannah launched her first scripted format Hello, Harto, a project that helped distribute food to local communities across America. These efforts in turn created Hannah's philanthropic community Have A Hart Day, an international, year-round initiative which encourages young leaders to volunteer their time in their own communities. Hannah was recognized by The White House for her ability to mobilize the youth through this initiative and she was invited to lead a discussion about millennial engagement with President Obama. She was also named to Forbes' 30 Under 30, an annual list which highlights talented individuals under 30 years old across a variety of fields in 2015.

Hannah's first book "My Drunk Kitchen: A Guide to Eating, Drinking, and Going with Your Gut," was based on her popular web series and spent six weeks on the New York Times Bestseller list. Her highly anticipated sophomore book "Buffering: Unshared Tales Of A Life Fully Loaded" debuted at number four on the New York Times Bestseller List in October 2016. Last year, Hannah starred in Legendary Digital Media's film "Electra Woman and Dyna Girl," a superhero action film with female-centric characters based on the popular 70's series of the same name. Hannah also co-produced and starred in Lionsgate's comedy "Dirty 30," which released in theaters and on digital platforms.

Born and raised in Northern California, Hannah currently resides in Los Angeles.
