What three to five things do you want the media to know about you? Examples may include certain messages, themes in your book, your background/education or accomplishments?

1. I'm a long-term sinner, disillusioned in promiscuity; I realized that adultery doesn't get you anywhere, while changing partners and chasing one-night pleasures bring more trouble than satisfaction. I decided to share my conviction with the others by giving them some tips as to how a couple can keep their passion ablaze for years and years. In a way, I've started a sexual counter-revolution.

2. I've been working in the sphere of intimate relations of permanent couples for quite a long time, and I'm an expert in the sphere. I'm more into practice than theory, I've developed a set of strategies that help to enhance the intimate life of a married couple. The strategies have been used for eight years; tens of thousands of couples have benefited from them. Amid these strategies are special adult games.

3. I've designed a series of 17 unique FANTY games for adults. The purpose of these games is to enrich your private life. They are divided into three categories:

- Games for permanent couples that want to chase boredom out of their bed and keep their love ablaze;
- Scenarios of successful dates;
- Games for uninhibited get-togethers.

It took ten years to design these games; they comprise all the best features of similar products worldwide.

See more on Fanty games at www.fantygames.com

4. I created a Collection of 200 sex role playing games called Keyhole Secrets. It's the most extensive collection of erotic fantasies and role playing games scenarios in the world; its target group are permanent couples. I doubt there would ever be a bigger one.

See more on the Collection at www.fantygames.com

5. I compiled a unique Catalogue of 550 positions and sex combinations. It has no rivals, for apart from 275 best sex positions it features 275 combinations of these positions, that's what makes it special. I put a lot of thinking into each combination; in effect, each is a mini scenario of passion. All the positions are illustrated by custom-made drawings; there are detailed descriptions of both the positions and the combinations. It's a full-fledged lovemaking manual.

What are your FIVE key messages or talking points? If you were allowed to only make FIVE statements about your book's theme or message what do you want readers/listeners to remember about you and or your book?

1. Want to stay in good health? Make love.
2. The energy of happiness is nurtured by passion.
3. Boredom in bed can destroy your family.
4. Want to be his only one? Be seductive!
5. The fewer inhibitions you let into your bedroom, the longer will your love live.

The next step is to build upon these key points by giving us several sentences of "conversation" about each talking point listed above that will help audiences understand your talking point better. (In an interview, the talking points can become how the host moves the interview along and your conversation about these talking points helps the host understand where you are going with your answer and when to move to the next talking point. Plus it helps you learn to convey a message in 3 or 4 sentences!)

1. Want to stay in good health? Make love. If you want to feel healthy and rejuvenated, make love regularly! Recent research conducted in USA, UK, Japan, Germany, Sweden and Australia shows that nothing is as good for your body as sex.

2. The energy of happiness is nurtured by passion

Sexual Energy is the main one of our Energies. Oriental philosophy of the universe is built around this concept. Personal harmony and fulfillment cannot be attained unless you fully explore your sexuality. The stability of a relationship depends primarily on the feeling of sexual satisfaction and sexual harmony between the man and the woman.

3. Boredom in bed can destroy your family. These days over half of all the marriages end in a divorce, sexual frustration being the main reason. That's what the research conducted in France, UK and USA tells us. Whether you like it or not, but, if you want your marriage to stay stable, you need to work on its major component, intimacy.

4. Want to be his only one? Be seductive! As a saying go, a man would go as far as love to get sex. Any woman can be his only one as long as she stays attractive and desirable. As a matter of fact, it's fairly simple, providing she is an actress at heart and brings a touch of acting into her life. We all know the rules of this game.

5. The fewer inhibitions you let into your bedroom, the longer will your love live. If you have the right understanding of the value and significance of sex, if you maintain a responsible attitude to this aspect of marital life, you will never stop making discoveries in bed, your emotions will never lose their color, and novelty will always be there. We are all extremely versatile in our sexuality, and each couple has a huge sexual potential. The main aspects of this kind of creativity are quite easy to list.

What are 6-8 questions you would like to be asked in an interview that would allow you to answer in a way that most allows you to share your message. Questions should be "benefit based" to your audiences and address their needs.

Days and times you are not available for interviews. We call these "blackout" dates and times and we will not schedule you during these times.

1. How important is sex in our lives, do we tend to overestimate its importance?
2. What kind of attitude to our sexuality should we take, should we restrain ourselves?
3. Why do couples find that passions subside with time and love turns into friendship?
4. Is sex really such an important bond for a loving couple, and should we get concerned when our intimate life begins to retreat to the background?
5. Men tend to be promiscuous. What should a woman do to keep her loved one by her side?
6. Is there a way to re-kindle the dying passions and re-introduce them into your family routine?
7. Where do you start searching for a new approach to your lovemaking, and how do you get your partner involved in your experiments?
8. Adultery is becoming a norm. Which attitude should we take and can we avoid it?

Actually, I don't feel comfortable giving interviews, I would rather put it all in writing; I can write a set of introductory essays on the topics that interest you (or the reporters).

Are you willing to travel for interviews? If so, how far?

Actually, I don't feel comfortable giving interviews, I would rather put it all in writing; I can write a set of introductory essays on the topics that interest you (or the reporters).

Do you currently have any book events set up? For example, a signing, speech, etc.

No

Why did you write this book? Is there any "back story" that inspired you to write this book?

I wrote this book after a devastating personal experience; having spent 21 years with the woman I loved, I got divorced; my two sons were left in a broken family. A more detailed history of how the novel was conceived is to be found in the attached Creative Biography.

How is your book different than others out in the market? What needs does your book meet that makes it a must for someone to buy?

1. This book was written neither by a dreamer or by a pseudo-expert who offers far-fetched advice; it was written by a man who saw it all as far as promiscuity is concerned. I have personal experience of all the darker sides of lust, and I have a very clear understanding of what I write about and how I can help the others.
2. This is definitely an educational book; however, unlike most other self-help books that deal with marital sex, it combines the formats of a novel and a manual. This helps to reinforce the author's main ideas with solid argumentation and to get the readers involved in the issues described.
3. Another special feature of this book is that it is deliberately provocative and loaded with controversies. They might make the feminists disagree, but I've done it deliberately, in order to make married women think and act; I wanted to show them a way to reboot their intimate relations.
4. Sexual frustration accounts for most divorces, that's why those couples who feel that their intimate life is becoming lackluster must read this book.
5. This book is an attempt to reconcile the Oriental approach to sex energy with the Western understanding of constructive egoism and complete personal freedom.
6. This novel will help the readers to sort out their sexuality and charter the path to its improvement.

List clubs, alumni groups, school, social, religious or business organizations to which you are affiliated:

No

If applicable, and if you're comfortable, is there any personal background about you such as hobbies, race, religious affiliation, sexual orientation, medical conditions, marital status, family, etc. we can include in our pitching efforts?

I'm an enthusiastic freerider, I've snowboarded in all the cult places of the world. I've been all over, from the Himalayas, Andes and Alaska to Greenland, New Zealand and Antarctic. Wild nature, life on the edge, people dying in avalanches, helicoptering in critical conditions, an ice storm on the approaches to the Antarctic... I've seen it all.

What, if any, media experience (interviews, TV appearances, etc.) do you have? Please list.

I do have such an experience, but it dates back to the times when I was in serious advertizing.

What is the most controversial aspect of your message or book?

The heroine goes out of her way and sacrifices her sense of propriety in order to retain her husband's love. Does a woman have to go to such great lengths for the sake of a man in these days of freedom? Do we really owe each other that much?

What ONE question do you most often get asked when people meet you/learn about what you do?

Do you really feel that monogamy is not an outdated type of gender relationship? No one belongs to anyone these days. Isn't it easier to swallow your partner's transgression and not turn it into a drama?

Are there any relevant facts, figures, research you would like us to use in your press material? If yes, please provide website addresses if applicable.

While studying the divorce statistics in major countries, I looked through a lot of essays and links to research data. All the sources are in agreement that in the majority of developed countries ca. 50% of all the marriages fall apart, and sexual frustration is the main reason for divorce. That's what research data from France, UK and USA tells us. Unfortunately, I can't provide you with the links to the sources of these data. I haven't saved them; however, they are easy to find.

Is your book based on your own life in any way? If so, please explain:

There's little fiction in my book. Most characters have prototypes, many story lines are based on real events. But the most important thing is the philosophy that the heroine masters through conversations and her personal experiences. It was the hardest part; this philosophy took ten years to shape, and it is based on real life experience. I set my own life and the life of my friends against the tradition of Oriental thought and contemporary philosophical concepts... Jean Baudrillard, Michel Foucault, Wilhelm Reich, Osho, Freud... I researched and analyzed everything pertaining to the philosophy of sexuality and the role of sex in human life, I tried to come up with a universal worldview. This worldview is positive, contemporary, upbeat, and I'm still working on it.

Are you comfortable talking about your book in public?

Yes

Where will your book be available for purchase (for example, Amazon, your website, book stores, etc.)?

Amazon.com

Are there any additional comments you want your publicist to know about you and your book?

Sex is often represented as dirty, it is used for blackmail and deceit; it is considered shameful and unsafe, it is often misrepresented... which is silly. It's a silly attitude to nature, energy, love. I tried to say that much in my book: I believe that sex is a great value and a blessing.

If applicable, please send us, electronically, any video or audio clips of you talking about your book/subject.
