

BioMarin and Believe Limited are proud to announce the 25 high school students selected to participate in the three-day 'Breaking Through! Musical Theater Intensive' and perform in the culminating, first-of-its-kind theatrical production 'Hemophilia: The Musical' on November 12.

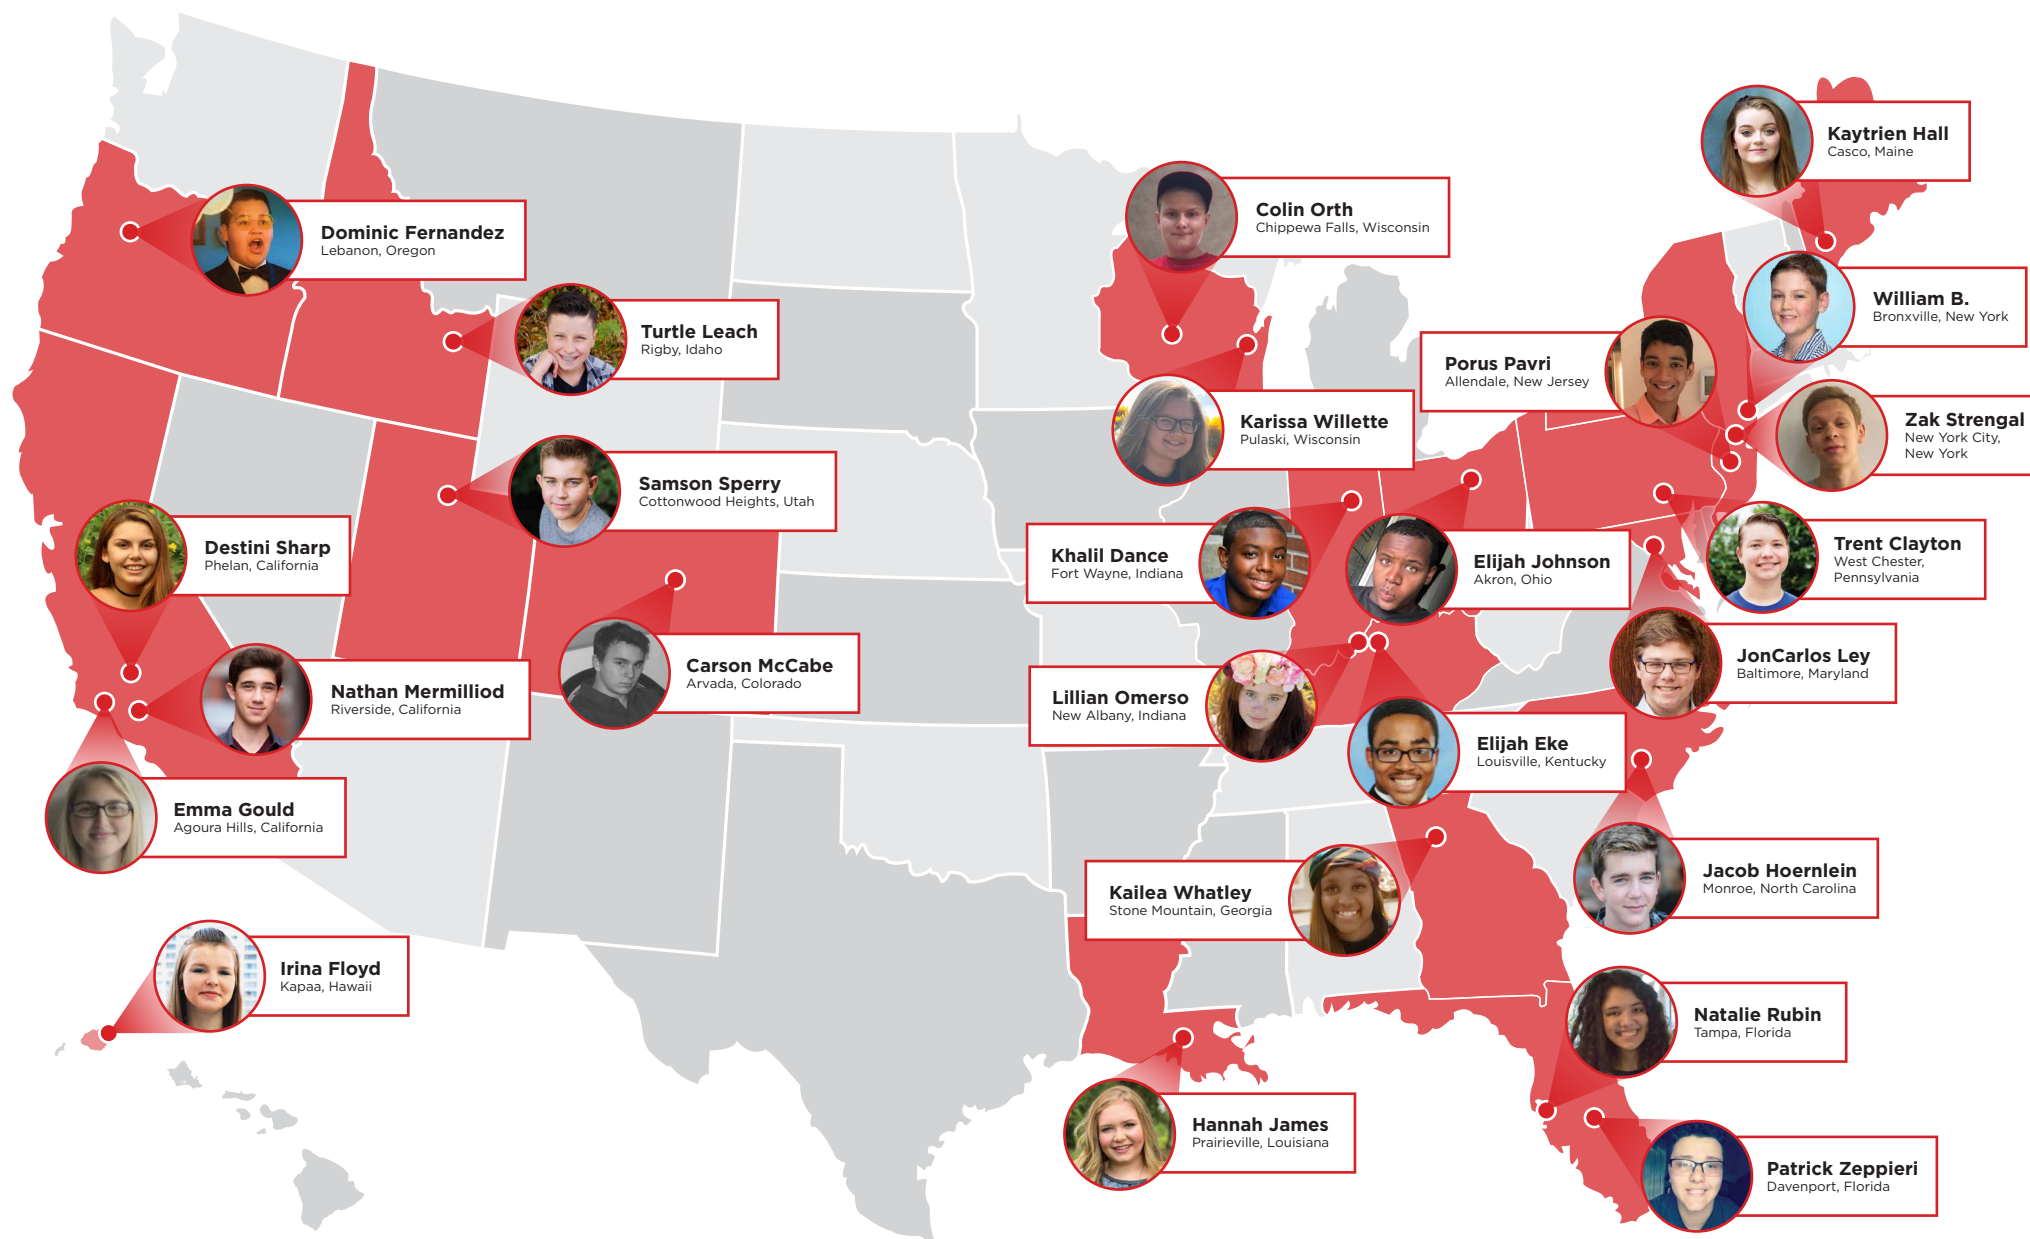

These students were selected after a nationwide search through a process which included submitting an application, essay and audition tape. The students will be flown to New York City to rehearse and perform in the 6-song musical about the psychosocial and general health aspects of being a young person with a bleeding disorder. Material will be custom-written based on each participants' shared experiences about living with hemophilia during the application process.

BioMarin and Believe Limited would like to congratulate the 25 students who have been selected to perform in 'Hemophilia: The Musical,' a first-of-its-kind theatrical production written and informed by their unique experiences of life as a young person with a bleeding disorder. The musical will take place at New World Stages in New York City on November 12, 2018 at 1 pm ET.

Prior to the performance, students will first participate in the 'Breaking Through!' Musical Theater Intensive, a three-day workshop that includes coaching sessions on the psychosocial benefits and therapeutic value of self-expression in the arts, as well as on the impact of breathing and relaxation on pain management.

"Young adults with bleeding disorders need a creative outlet that allows them to express what they are thinking or feeling, and specifically showcase how their lives are impacted," said Patrick James Lynch, Believe Limited CEO and 'Breaking Through!' director. "We were blown away by the talent and thoughtfulness of the applicants, and we cannot wait to help them bring their stories and talent to life as we also introduce them to just how beneficial the arts can be for young people affected by chronic illness!"
